ABA CROSSING BORDERS Shared Principles of Independent Judiciary, 4 of the World

OUR WORLD GROWS SMALLER each day. Few could have imagined even five years ago the scope and implications of globalization of commerce and law.

More American lawyers today serve clients with international business concerns than ever before. From large global, economic, business and legal issues affect us all. In contract disputes, intellectual property thefts and which nation's laws apply and which venue is most appropriate to resolve disputes are commonplace.

Prosecutors, criminal defense lawyers and government regulators also face multiplying cases in which foreign into contact with the U.S. justice system. Lawyers worldwide now must be aware of the laws, customs and practices in the U.S. an immigration policy highlights the vital role that lawyers and judges play in determining w

Addressing the ABA House of Delegates last August, Justice Stephen G. Breyer noted the need for American changes in international law. He cited six recent U.S. Supreme Court decisions dealing with the application of and law students to broaden their exposure to and understanding of international law.

Access to legal services markets worldwide has also become an important issue as more foreign lawyers see
